UTAH

National Alliance to End Homelessness

The economy just doesn't work for a rapidly-growing number of Americans across urban, suburban, and rural communities alike. Wages that do not keep up with the cost of living, a shortage of affordable housing, a broken healthcare system, and a weak social safety net force people out of their homes and into homelessness every single week.

11,289 people enter homelessness each year in Utah.

WITHIN UTAH:

There are only 28 affordable rental homes for every 100 extremely low-income renter households.

Minimum wage earners must work 162 hours weekly to afford a two-bedroom rental home.

There are 327,000 people with unmet substance use treatment needs.

Mental health provider capacity meets only 50.8% of estimated community need.

Homelessness response systems are stuck between a rock and a hard place. They have become the default safety net for every other system's shortcomings — and they're being stretched beyond their limits.

3,543 people move into permanent housing each year in Utah.

WITHIN UTAH:

Emergency shelter capacity can only serve 52% of individual adults experiencing homelessness.

Available permanent housing can serve only 9% of people experiencing homelessness.
